

CATHERINE BOWES
Northeast Global Warming Program Manager
National Wildlife Federation

Catherine Bowes is the Northeast Global Warming Program Manager for National Wildlife Federation. She has over 10 years of experience in environmental communications and advocacy, working throughout the northeast on issues including global warming, mercury pollution, and water quality. Prior to joining NWF, Ms. Bowes worked for Conservation Law Foundation in their Boston, Massachusetts and Montpelier, Vermont offices. She has advocated effective solutions to our most pressing environmental problems in a variety of venues ranging from the U.S. EPA hearings to Capitol Hill. Ms. Bowes holds a Master's degree in Environmental Policy from Bard College and an undergraduate degree in Political Science from Washington University in St. Louis.
